The Eros Sanctuary

Workbook Module 2

Feel, play, love

Pelvic Wave practice & journaling prompts

The Practice: Pelvic Waves

The pelvic wave is a fundamental embodiment practice that helps to set energy in motion within the pelvic area. It is a gentle yet powerful way to release "armouring" (stored physical and emotional tension) in the deeper tissues and restore the connection between your punani and your heart.

Step-by-Step Instructions:

Preparation: Lie comfortably on your back on a yoga mat or a soft surface. Bend your knees and place your feet flat on the floor, hip-width apart. Let your arms rest relaxedly alongside your body with your palms facing upward.

The Tilt: Begin with gentle breathing. Upon inhaling, let your lower back arch slightly, pressing your tailbone into the mat. Upon exhaling, tilt your pelvis backward so that your lower back lies flat against the floor and your tailbone comes slightly off the mat.

The Wave: Now, make the movement fluid. Visualize your spine as a wave in the ocean. The movement starts in your pelvis and waves upward into your neck and head. Do not force anything; it is an organic ebb and flow movement.

With Sound: Consciously soften your jaw. Let your lips part slightly. Feel how the relaxation in your mouth resonates directly with the relaxation in your pelvic floor. As the pelvic wave moves upward, you may make a soft "Ahhh" sound on the exhale.

Presence: Feel the energy (Eros) released by this movement. Notice where the pelvic wave flows less easily or feels blocked, and direct extra breath and softness to those areas.

Practice this daily for 5 to 10 minutes to keep your system open and in "flow".

Journaling prompts:

After the Pelvic Wave practice, your body is open. Use this moment to question the deeper layers of your heart. Write without overthinking, directly from your feelings.

"Where do I feel 'hard,' 'tight,' or 'closed' in my upper body at this moment? What is this physical tension telling me?"

"What is my heart trying to protect itself against? What fear or vulnerability lies hidden beneath my shield?"

"What changes in the depth and rhythm of my breathing when I very consciously let my jaw and tongue soften?"

"If I were to let my armor drop by just one millimeter today, what emotion would come out first?"

Only love, Swaane

www.swaanelauwaert.com