THE EROS SANCTUARY MODULE 3

WELCOME BACK!

Now that we've softened the physiological shield around the lungs and the heart, it's time for an intimate encounter with yourself. So many women look at their bodies and punani through a lens of judgment, comparison, or dissociation—often because self-exploration wasn't encouraged when we were young girls, or was even shamed. Maybe your yoni feels foreign, frustrating, or like something you need to 'fix.' Today, we're reprogramming those patterns and looking through the eyes of the Queen: with neutral curiosity, deep reverence, and radical self-acceptance. You are a divine creation. Everything is exactly as it should be. You are perfect just the way you are.

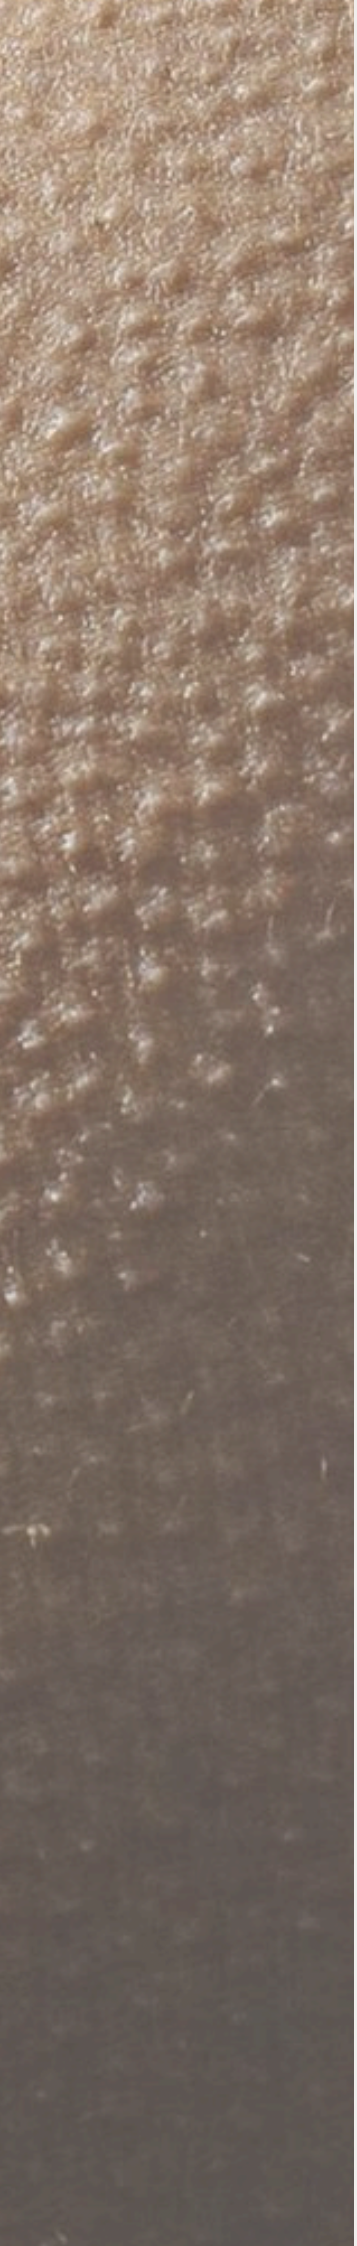

1. MIRROR, MIRROR ON THE WALL

This is a powerful, sometimes challenging somatic practice. The goal is to consciously let go of any judgment about your appearance by simply witnessing what is and embracing whatever comes up.

INSTRUCTIONS:

- Take your time with this: create a cozy, safe nest, and make sure you have absolute privacy and won't be interrupted.
- Make sure you have a full-length mirror, a hand mirror, and a pen and paper nearby.
- Make sure the room is nice and warm. Get completely undressed.
- Stand in front of the full-length mirror. Look at your whole, naked body. Activate that imaginary crown on your head: keep your neck long, straighten your back, and connect with your self-worth. You are a divine creation!
- Scan your body. Look at your breasts, your belly, your hips, your thighs. If judgments pop up ("too fat," "too saggy," "not beautiful"), just notice them, breathe out deeply through your mouth with a loose jaw, and bring your gaze back to neutral curiosity. This body is your kingdom; every scar, every line, and every curve belongs. You are exactly who you need to be, there is absolutely nothing that needs to be changed!

- Now, grab your hand mirror. Sit or lie down comfortably with your legs spread, and look very consciously at the entrance of your vagina, your vulva, your yoni. This is the most sacred, creative landscape of your body. Look at her. Bring your breath all the way down into your pelvic floor. Breathe in and out through your mouth, and send an inner smile to your pussy.
- What do you notice? Is there resistance? Is there numbness? Is there sadness? Just let everything be there without wanting to change it right away.
- Whisper inwardly to your beautiful lotus flower: "You are safe. You are beautiful. You are radiant. I love you!"

2. THE LOVE LETTER TO YOUR BODY & PUNANI

When you feel that the encounter in the mirror is complete, grab your journal or a beautiful piece of paper and a pen. Stay naked, or wrap a soft blanket around you. You are going to write from your heart, from your intuition, without thinking and without any filters. And you will write a love letter to your yoni and unique body.

On the next page, you'll find some prompting questions in case you need them, but feel free to completely do your own thing.

Start with:

Beautiful yoni (fill in your favorite word here), my wonderful body,....

SOME IDEAS:

- I love you so much because...
- I see you as...
- You are so beautiful...
- You feel like...
- I am totally crazy about...
- I know that...
- I find you so incredibly fascinating because...
- Forgive me for...
- Thank you so much for...
- Thank you for being my... and for always...
- From this day on, I promise I will never... you again, but instead we will... together

DIGGING DEEPER:

- What judgments or old stories about your looks do you feel popping up right now, and how can you look at them through the eyes of the Queen?
- If your body and your yoni had their own voice, what would they love to tell you or ask you right now?
- At what moments do you secretly slip back into your head and lose connection with your lower belly, and what helps you to soften again?
- Which old messages or patterns of judgment and shame are you truly, completely done with as of today?
- How does it actually feel to just "be" with your own anatomy and your own life energy, without anything needing to be done, achieved, or fixed?
- What three non-negotiable promises are you making to your body starting today, to take care of her like a sanctuary?
- What things can you do daily to stay connected to your Eros, to your vital life energy?
